IELTS Up Words!

Lesson 42: Personality

Hey there! I see you are back to learn more! Welcome! This is lesson forty-two of IELTS Up Words, and I am Yasi from Lingemy.com

In this lesson, I will get to know you better. Why? Because this lesson is all about personality and how we can talk about it. Now, before we move further into the lesson, why don't you pause the audio and tell me a bit about yourself. What kind of person do you think you are?

What about me? I guess I come across as aloof at first. You know, people might think that I am distant, but when they get to know me better, they will realize that I can be quite friendly. What about you? What sort of impression do you give people when they first meet you?

Now, let's get to today's questions. I am going to ask you three questions on the topic of personality. Ready?

Which personal qualities do you think we most want to pass on to our children?

I think we would all want our children to be self-confident and self-assured because these two traits would pave the way for them to succeed in this world. Being assertive and conscientious are two other characteristics that I believe are what most parents would want their children to display, as these two attributes can help them especially with their careers. And I guess no one would want their kids to end up being egotistical. We all know how annoying it can be to socialize with people who are too proud of themselves.

Which characteristics do you think are the least appealing in a person?

Well, to me, narrow-mindedness is extremely unappealing. It is not easy to strike up a conversation with someone who expects others to listen to him or her all the time. These people can be self-centered, which is another terrible thing about them. Dishonesty is another trait that I find very annoying. Relationships and friendships are built on trust, and without honesty, there is not much left.

Which personality types do you think are less likely to suffer from stress or anxiety?

Definitely people who are thick-skinned, probably because they are not afraid of failing since they know they can handle anything. Another advantage of this trait, I think, is that when you grow a thick skin, you don't take it personally when someone overreacts to what you say or do.

Speaking Tip

Tip on Negation

Tip: Instead of negating your sentences, find the right word and say what you mean more precisely. You could do this by using opposites.

Example:

She isn't patient with her kid.

She is impatient with her kid.
