IELTS Up Words!

Lesson 49: Food

Hello, and welcome back! Always coming back for more, huh? Haha! Yeah, we still have more than two dozen lessons in store for you. So, no worries!

This is the forty-ninth lesson of IELTS Up Words! In this lesson, we are going to talk about food. Do you like food? Who doesn't, right? Well, except for anorexic people! Anorexic people eat very little food, often because they don't want to gain weight.

In the previous lesson, I mentioned the term "GM foods," remember? Genetically modified foods (or GM foods) are foods produced from plants or animals whose DNA has been altered through genetic engineering. While this type of production can have benefits such as providing foods with more appetizing flavors and beautiful, vibrant colors, we cannot turn a blind eye to its many disadvantages. With that being said, we need to be extra cautious with the food we consume these days if we care about our well-being since a lot of products nowadays contain artificial ingredients and preservatives. Now, with the things I mentioned in mind, let's answer the following diet-related question.

Do you think that cooking is a pleasure or a burden for most people?

I think it depends on the individual and is different from person to person. Some people think cooking can be a real chore, while others consider it meditative and take great pleasure in spending long hours making something mouthwatering. It also depends on people's lifestyles. If they lead a hectic life and always have a busy schedule, you cannot really expect them not to eat out, order takeaways, or make ready meals.

Speaking Tip

Conditionals

When answering a question in part one, do not start with complicated opening lines. This can increase the chances of you making a mistake, and as a result, plant a seed in the examiner's mind that says you struggle with grammar. So, keep things simple and accurate and start with something you are 100% comfortable with so that you can steady your nerves. Then, in part three, use more complex structures to both begin your answer and develop it.

Using conditionals is a great way to add complexity to the grammar you use in your response.

A Review of Different Types

• Type Zero: to express what always happens when a particular action or event takes place.

Example: If you freeze water, it turns into ice.

• Type One: to express what is likely to happen as a result of an event (in the present or the future)

Example: If you don't practice enough, you won't pass the test.

• Type Two: to talk about the results of impossible, imaginary, or unlikely events in the present or the future.

Example: If I were the president, I would change education policies.

• Type Three: to talk about an imaginary result of a situation in the past that did not happen.

Example: If I had moved to America, I would have learned English faster.
