IELTS Up Words!

Lesson 50: Study

Hello, and welcome to lesson fifty of IELTS Up Words! Remember lessons nine and ten? In those lessons, we talked about schools and universities. In this lesson, why not go a bit deeper and learn more words and structures?

We are going to go through three questions now and I want you to not only put your prior knowledge into practice but also learn even more.

Ready?

Can you identify what makes a good student?

Although some people would think a good student is someone who constantly gets good grades, in my opinion, the most important criterion is being highly motivated. Motivation is a crucial component of a strong character, and thus, necessary to succeed in life. I would also argue that curiosity is another characteristic that makes a good student, as a curious person has a thirst for knowledge and would make a concerted effort to solve problems.

Do you think students should be required to evaluate their teachers?

Having been both a teacher and a student myself, I think it can be quite beneficial to have students evaluate their teachers to ensure they are competent. In other words, this evaluation will reveal whether an instructor can maximize his or her students' learning and has a good rapport with them. As a result, teachers will make a more conscious effort to stay updated and be friendly towards their pupils.

Can you speculate on the biggest challenge that universities will face in the future?

I predict a dramatic decrease in the number of academically inclined young people, which means there will be fewer prospective students to attend college. Because of the shift in the job market, fewer people will see the need to study academic subjects; instead, they will choose to take technical courses or go to vocational schools. This means that future universities will have to adapt to these imminent changes if they want to stay relevant.

Speaking Tip

Subordinating Conjunctions

To score high in the speaking part of IELTS, it is important to show off your knowledge of grammar and use some complex structures, and the best time to do so is in the third section of the test. For example, you can start your response with subordinating conjunction to show you know complex structures. Using subordinating conjunctions will certainly impress the examiner if used appropriately and correctly.
