IELTS Up Words!

Lesson 52: Advertisement

Welcome back to another lesson of IELTS Up Words! What a journey we have been on! Your range of vocabulary is already promising and your knowledge of the IELTS speaking test phenomenal. Right?

I don't mean to brag, but I am sure your English has improved exponentially since the start of this course. Now you have a better idea of the speaking section of IELTS and know what you should do to score high. This is just what we do, you know, here in Lingemy, we put extra focus on providing our learners with the perfect material. Of course, I am not trying to sell you anything or use a marketing ploy, but I bet you wouldn't regret checking out our other courses and maybe purchasing one? Haha! I have even made a jingle for you to persuade you even more:

If you want to learn English better,

Did you like it? Marketing is indeed a vital part of every successful business. And businesses all over the world use an array of tactics and strategies to up their game and earn more. They use slogans, gimmicks, telemarketing, and plaster all walls with flyers to grab as much attention as possible.

Marketing is also a frequently asked topic of IELTS speaking, so we are going to go through one of these questions together today. I am going to ask you a part-two speaking question. I want you to think about this question for one minute and take notes, then, start talking about it for about two minutes. Finally, listen to my sample response. Make sure to record your voice, so that you can compare it with my response and analyze it later.

Describe an interesting advertisement that you have seen. You should say:

- where you saw it
- what it was about
- why you thought it was an interesting advertisement

I am going to talk about an advertisement for Pepsi, which is one of the most prominent brands in the world. This ad was forwarded to me years ago on a social media platform that I don't quite remember the name of. In this specific advert, Pepsi joined forces with Enrique Iglesias, Beyoncé, Pink, and Britney Spears, who are some of the most iconic music industry faces to create an entertaining and glamorous TV commercial.

The storyline starts in the Roman Empire, in which these three female celebrities were kept as gladiators who have to fight against each other to entertain the crowd and more specifically to entertain Enrique—the Pepsi drinking emperor who is also the villain. However, there is a twist in this story. Instead of fighting, they sing "we will rock you," a song by Queen, and win the attention of the crowd. At the same time, some Pepsi cans move closer to the scene, which indicates that they are winning.

The advert is amusing because the company is deliberately trying to influence and attract fans of these music giants with the help of a nostalgic song. The thing I like a lot about it is that unlike most other ads, it is not manipulative and does not make any false claims about the benefits of this beverage.

Speaking Tip

More on Speaking Part Two

As mentioned in lesson thirty, there are usually six types of questions that you will encounter in part two of IELTS speaking. However, it is not uncommon to come across a cue card with a question other than those six, such as today's question. But the good news is that you can always find a type that is somehow similar to the question at hand. For example, the above question resembles the "favorite" type, and therefore, you can use phrases like the ones I introduced in lesson forty-one to answer it.
