IELTS Up Words!

Lesson 53: Shopping

Hello, and welcome to lesson fifty-three of IELTS Up Words! In this lesson, why not talk about something that we all enjoy doing? I am talking about shopping!

You might disagree and say that this couldn't be further from the truth and that you detest shopping, but still, I bet there is something out there that you enjoy buying, right? Maybe not luxury goods, but what about online language courses from Lingemy.com? Haha! I think I am overdoing it with marketing.

But really, Lingemy is not just after selling some products. We also care deeply about our customers and providing excellent customer service. We honor all commitments and take complaints very seriously. So, if you feel that one of our courses does not come up to standard, then we will immediately offer you a refund.

Anyways, tell me, what kind of shopper are you? I am going to list three types here for you to choose from.

Impulsive shopper: You might go to the shops in search of sandals and come back with a winter coat. You may also have things in your wardrobe with the price tag still on them. You are retailers' favorite type of customer because you are easily enticed into shops and make impulsive purchases.

Situational shopper: You never shop till you drop. No. You are not there for browsing—you are after a particular buy. And the minute you get it, you are off. You won't be distracted by cheap offers or free merchandise. You also dislike window shopping.

Bargain buyer: You have an eye for a bargain, and you will shop around until you find it. You are an expert in haggling and love shopping, especially bargain hunting in the sales. You also don't mind going on a shopping spree every few months.

Personally, I consider myself a situational shopper, who is careful enough not to buy anything on a whim. But it is sometimes hard to do so because we are living in this consumer society, bombarded with all types of marketing techniques like product placement in films, TV programs, magazines, and other media.

Speaking Tip

Sentence Stress and Intonation

Now that you are getting better at using topic-related vocabulary and developing your ideas, pay closer attention to your intonation and sentence stress. Intonation and sentence stress are about how tone, pitch, and stress can change what we mean. For example, notice how the meaning of the following sentence changes every time I stress a different word.

I think there is not much that we can do.

The most heavily stressed word is usually the most important one in your sentence and signifies its purpose. Bear in mind that we usually put the sentence stress on nouns, verbs, adjectives, or adverbs, and rarely on modal verbs, articles, or prepositions. Intonation refers to the pitch of your voice, as you pronounce a word or a sentence. For example, when we ask a yes/no question, it typically has a rising pitch boundary.
