IELTS Up Words!

Lesson 67: Neighborhood

Hello again! Welcome to lesson sixty-seven of IELTS Up Words! In the previous lesson, we talked about our hometowns and felt all nostalgic over it. Haha. Now, let's move on to the topic of neighborhoods.

What do you think of your neighborhood?

I personally love mine. I live on the outskirts of the city of Tehran, far away from the downtown, the incessant roar of trucks and buses, the shanty towns, and the industrial zones. Here, you don't feel overwhelmed by the frantic pace of the city, and the streets are not strewn with litter, and the sewage system is decent.

However, this location has its own problems too. For example, all the properties are so spread out that you can't get around without a car. I admit it is not a walkable place, as there are not many pedestrian crossings and footbridges. I also don't like my neighbors, to be honest. They are some nosy housewives, and I just need to constantly remind them to mind their own business. Haha.

To tell you the truth, I am not like most other city-dwellers. I prefer to live in the countryside, but I think you already knew that because I mentioned it in some of the previous lessons. I don't care about modern recreational facilities or the pulsating nightlife that the city can offer. I would choose a pastoral lifestyle over anything else. I guess I am just another alienated metropolitan that is fed up with the city.

This is another important topic in IELTS, and I want you to sit down and make a list of words that can describe your neighborhood, hometown, or the place in which you live now. Describe them and talk about their advantages and disadvantages.

Now, let's answer a related part-one question together. Ready?

What areas of your town or city do you recommend to visitors? Why?

I strongly recommend them to go on a food tour in places such as the Grand Bazaar and Tajrish because they can learn a lot about the culture and vibe of the city through its unique cuisine. The areas that I mentioned are dotted with gourmet food stores and coffee shops that I am sure every visitor will enjoy.

Speaking Tip

Sensory Language

Do not use words like good, great, or bad in your speaking. Don't say, "the book was bad." Bad in what way? Describe it.

Use sensory language as a means of making your talk more realistic and descriptive.

Using sensory language helps you speak for a longer time.

Integrate the five senses in your speaking: sight, hearing, feeling, tasting, and smelling.

To use sensory language, you need to learn a lot of adjectives to be able to describe something.

Practice by describing objects around you. For example, when you drink some water, describe the feeling and the taste. Is it cold, lukewarm, or hot? Is it tap water or bottled water? Does it smell like rain or like a type of chemical?
