IELTS Up Words!

Lesson 69: Happiness

In the previous lesson, we talked about the problem of depression, but as I have said numerous times, we face many more problems these days, such as the problem of divorce and unhappiness. So, in this lesson, we are going to talk about these issues.

Divorce

Divorce rates are at an all-time high, which I think stems from various reasons. For one, the constant pressure of staying on top of their bills and keeping up with other expenses sure can take its toll on married couples and aggravate a bad mood. Add to this the fact that couples don't share as much anymore, which is due to the new ways of interaction and social media. These issues have contributed to a rise in divorce rates and separations.

Unhappiness

I think people are not as happy anymore. There is just too much pressure on each and every one of us to be perfect. We all want to make constructive changes in our lives, but this desire to do our best all the time does more harm than good. Don't you think? Because we want to show the world how perfect we are all the time, we suppress our true feelings and bottle up our emotions, which is terrible.

We need to find healthy ways to release our pent-up emotions and try to be more vulnerable every now and then. Because if we don't pour out our innermost thoughts to our besties or confidants, we might develop severe mental problems like anxiety.

I don't mean that we should wear our heart on our sleeve; I just think it is a good idea to disclose our thoughts to our partner or friend for the sake of our own mental health. This might even help rectify broken relationships.

Now, let's answer a part-three question on the topic of happiness. Ready?

Do you think old people are very happy?

I believe most of them are, for several reasons. This is because they do not feel the pressure society puts on its productive citizens to accomplish more and work harder, which helps improve their general mood. If they had their hands full handling a lot of responsibilities, they probably wouldn't remain as elated. Also, they have more spare time on their hands compared to younger people, who can hardly find a minute to be alone. This allows them to pursue their hobbies and do things that make them truly happy.

The Pomodoro Technique

- The Pomodoro Technique is a time management method developed by Francesco Cirillo in the late 1980s.
- The Pomodoro Technique is probably one of the simplest productivity methods to implement.
- Choose a task, such as studying one of the lessons in this course, and set the timer for twenty-five minutes.
- Work on the task until your alarm goes off, then take a short break of about five minutes.
- Take a long break after every four sessions.
- There is also an app called “Pomodoro” that you can use for this purpose.
