IELTS Up Words!

Lesson 76: Cybercrime

Hello there! Welcome to lesson seventy-six of IELTS Up Words! You are listening to me, Yasi, your IELTS mentor. Remember what I said in lesson two? I said that we were going to embark on a journey together! Well, this journey is about to come to an end, and I have to say that I've loved every bit of it so far! Hopefully, you have reached a level at which you can comfortably communicate your ideas with better wording and make up stories with ease.

In this lesson, we will look at the topic of crime once again, and, more specifically, cybercrime. Cybercrime is defined as "criminal activities carried out using computers or the Internet." Some cybercrimes include phishing, identity theft scams, online harassment, invasion of privacy, and cyberstalking. These are criminal offenses and should not be confused with trolling, which is not a crime in many countries. We have talked about Internet trolls in lesson thirty-nine, so make sure to check it out if you don't remember what it is.

I think cybercrime is one of the biggest threats to modern societies these days. It is in fact too big and widespread a problem to be left on the shoulders of politicians and police to solve. We need to be vigilant when we are online. That is the first rule. The second rule is to protect children as they are especially vulnerable online and are targeted by most cybercriminals. They can be a victim of online abuse and exploitation.

Another thing that should be done in terms of deterring cybercrime is to introduce more severe punishments. By that, I don't mean inflicting corporal punishment, but maybe longer prison terms and heavier fines.

What I am trying to say is that I don't approve of the conditions in most prisons, but I also don't think letting convicted criminals roam the streets is a good idea. All criminals should appear in court and accept the consequences of their actions, and their punishment should fit their crime.

If they have committed atrocious crimes, like acts of terrorism, they should be sentenced to life without parole, but if they have committed cyberstalking, they should undergo therapy or do community service. The judge should, of course, reach a verdict only when he or she is provided with concrete evidence.

However, I am totally opposed to sending juvenile criminals to jail as their behavior is usually due to falling in with the wrong crowd. So, they should be treated leniently and be given a second chance to turn over a new leaf. Locking them up will only increase the chances of them re-offending.
